Misdirected Philanthropy.

[New York Journal of Commerce.] Another grand plan for improving the condition of the poor has gone the way of many such schemes. At the time the Artidwelling act of 1875 was broached in the British Parliament it was regarded by enthusiastic persons as a happy solution of one serious problem. The object of the act was gradually to rid the crowded parts of London of old tenementhouses, which were the abode of fitth, immorality, and disease. For this purpose the Metropolitan Board of Health were authorized to condemn all such buildwere authorized to condemn all such buildings and tear them down. Before the buildings could be removed, however, the Board were obliged to pay the owner a fair-ly assessed valuation for his property. The structures could then be razed to the ground and the site or lease be sold to the nighest bidder who would agree to put up improved tenement-houses. The late one of the most ingenious and beneficient ever contrived to improve the condition of the London poor, and claimed great honor for devising it and forcing its adoption. It has now been in operation five years, and what is the result? The Board of Works have condemned and torn down the foul rookeries which covered six large the foul rookeries which covered six large aress and resold the grounds to landfords who promised better things. They have paid high prices for buildings which were totally worthless. In this way they made it an object for landlords to allow their tenements to rot and almost turnble down without the least attempt to save them from ruin by timely repairs. The owners have actually taken pains to call the attention of the Board to the dilapidated structures in order to procure the condemnastructures in order to procure the condemna-tion and the high prices which the Board were always compelled to pay. On the six areas already mentioned the loss to the London tax-payers has been £562,000. It would probably have been more had not the Board of Works fortunately found purchasers for all of them in the Peabody trustees. The Board long ago discovered that nothing is easter than to buy worthless property, and easter than to buy worthless property, and nothing barder than to sell it except at a great sacrifice. On eight other areas of ricketty houses which have been bought and torn down, the estimated loss will not be less than £500,000, and if the Board execute their present ambitious designs in be wasted on other purchases. It is said, however, that the Board will not longer persist in this foily. They feet that five years is a sufficient term for testing the Artisans' dwelling act. It is a cause of surprise that the Board should have persevered prise that the Board should have persevered so long in transferring money from the pockets of the tax-payers to that of grasping house owners and landlords, who are the only persons hitherto benefited. We could explain it easily if the Board were of the New York pattern. As for the poor dispossessed persons, they are worse off than ever. They have been deprived of homes for which no better substitutes have yet been found. For, while the Peabody trustees have covered all or a part of their six areas with so-called model dwelling-houses, other of the cleared spaces have not been other of the cleared spaces have not been built up. As a result the tenants who have been turned into the street are driven to seek bad quarters elsewhere. The London authorities declare that the tenement districts of the city are more overcrowded than ever. The net consequence of the act is undoubtedly a positive harm to the London poor. And this barm has been inflicted at a cost of a million or more of pounds to the tax-payers. As the experiment turns out it would have been far better to have raised funds for the relief of the poor by a special tax and expended it upon them directly.
